

Born out of the work and vision of its Members the ITSS Verona Magazine of International Security wishes to offer students, academics and working professionals from all over the world a platform to share their ideas related to issues about international security, international relations, conflict, crisis situations, diplomacy, strategy and paths to increase security.

Each number, which will be semestral, features a section dedicated to major academic debates, for this first number we decided to propose two different topics: challenges to individuals' security and how to unlock a new global order. Policy papers follow to present existing and potential scenarios and challenges to information security.

The last section features the winners of the ITSS Verona call for papers thematic competition, about the future of the African continent through investments, policies, and international relations with the world.

Peer-reviewed by the members of the Team, this Magazine is an equal opportunity magazine and, as such, invites all submissions from all types of background.

The aim is to benefit from the precious diversity of the ITSS team in order to discuss and explore contemporary or future security issues from various and innovative perspectives.

We would like to thank first of all Michele Groppi and Zeno Leoni for entrusting us with this project, but also all the editors who made the development of this first issue possible.
